

Manifesto

I have a dream, a vision and more importantly a story... when I was staring out at the school of pharmacy, I was but a withering soul without a worry. Having a misdirected passion for drugs I chose this degree, but soon I found out that watching episodes of Narcos would not prepare me for the rigour of this tumultuous course. Life was looking bleak, sad and lonely and I was becoming victim to the demon that is MPharm, there was no hope... Then like when Jesus walked on water, I stumbled upon the BPSA! An organisation dedicated to representing the budding pharmacist such as myself, and not just represent but entertain and educate as well! This was just what I needed to reinject my passion and excitement to take this degree by its' horns. My vision is to guide that young naïve pharmacist that I once was and to show them that there is indeed a light at the end of this bleak-looking tunnel and a perfect avenue to find this light is the wonderous BPSA, I will be a voice for students, I will plan and run events, and this will pay dividends SOP wide.
